WHAT FRENCH DEFENSE POLICY IN THE FACE OF A FRACTURED WORLD?

TUESDAY, OCTOBER 8TH
10.30 AM, TRUCY-VAUBAN AMPHITHEATER

STRATEGIC AND POLITICAL ISSUES

“Defence! This is the primary raison d'être of the State. It cannot fail to do so without destroying itself”. (Charles de Gaulle, Bayeux speech 1952). In a fractured [and] tense world, in which antagonisms and resentments were growing stronger on the international scene, the question of France's defence was once again raised. After several decades of insouciance during which defence budgets and manpower played the role of an adjustment variable, the time has come to reassess the place and form that the defence effort should take in the action of the State.

The 2024-2030 Military Planning Act (LPM) voted through on 7 June this year (314 votes in favour, 87 against) provides for an increase in the defence budget to a total of €413 billion over the next 7 years, raising the national defence effort to 2% of GDP from 2025. Can the recent legislative elections call this commitment into question? Do we need to review the balance between national autonomy, the development of a European defence and the Atlantic Alliance? Do we need to reassess the balance between technology and mass?

This round-table discussion, which will bring together elected representatives from the French National Assembly and the Senate of different political parties, will help to determine what visions, strategies and political options are being proposed to the French people by the various parties. For we are leaving behind the days of mere management and entering the era of real politics.

ROUND
TABLE

ECONOMIC SOVEREIGNTY AND POWER ISSUES: WHAT STRATEGY AND MODEL FOR FRANCE?

TUESDAY, OCTOBER 8TH
10.30 AM, COLBERT ROOM

CROSSING SECURITY CHALLENGES

After decades of economic and political convergence driven by the liberal globalisation that began in the early 1980s, the world is now in a structural phase of fragmentation. Economic interdependence, once seen as a guarantee of efficiency and peace, is now seen as a vulnerability that limits freedom of action and authorises coercion.

How can we regain the necessary level of sovereignty in a world that remains both interdependent and in competition, or even confrontation? What sovereignty should we guarantee vis-à-vis China? Energy producers? The United States? Or even other European countries? Does the notion of European sovereignty still have any meaning? Are defence industries particularly at stake? The participants in this round table will attempt to answer all these questions.

MODERATOR

FRENCH DETERRENCE IN THE FACE OF NEW THREATS: ISSUES, CHALLENGES, AND DEVELOPMENTS

TUESDAY, OCTOBER 8TH
10.30 AM, RAIMU ROOM

TECHNOLOGICAL CHALLENGES AND DISRUPTIONS

Is the notion of 'conventional deterrence' still relevant?

For the past 80 years, nuclear deterrence has made it possible to avoid a major conflict between major nuclear-armed powers. As Raymond Aron noted, peace was unlikely but war became impossible. However, the fracturing of the world and the growing antagonism between the powers, of which the war in Ukraine is an illustration and the war in Taiwan an option, make it possible to envisage a high-intensity conflict that would circumvent the nuclear deterrent 'from below'. The proliferation of high-tech weapons, now in the hands of many states or even militias, makes us even more vulnerable. How can we discourage a potential assailant from attacking our forces or our territory?

ROUND TABLE

ASSERTING POWER AND RIVALRIES: REDEFINING THE BALANCE OF POWER?

TUESDAY, OCTOBER 8TH
2.30 PM, TRUCY-VAUBAN AMPHITHEATER

GEOPOLITICAL RECOMPOSITIONS

We are living through a period of global geopolitical recomposition, with China challenging American supremacy. This challenge is opening up strategic areas to a declining power - Russia - and an emerging power - India. How is this quartet positioning itself? All against the United States, as the growing role of the BRICS and the Shanghai Cooperation Organisation (SCO) might suggest? In two camps, as the interplay of alliances ('unlimited friendship' vs. QUAD) suggests? Or every man for himself, in an all-out transactional form? What is the impact of this power game for the strategic region that covers the Indian Ocean, the Middle East, the Mediterranean basin and Africa? This round table will decipher developments within these four powers and in their relations and balances of power.

AFRICA AT THE HEART OF INFLUENCE STRATEGIES: GEOPOLITICAL SHIFTS IN THE SAHEL-SUDAN STRIP

 TUESDAY, OCTOBER 8TH
2.30 PM, RAIMU ROOM

 GEOPOLITICAL RECOMPOSITIONS

Security, political-institutional, cultural, media, information, militant and economic changes are profoundly reshaping the face and international trajectory of the African continent. These structural disruptions are contributing to changes both in the contours of governance on the continent and in its relations with its international partners. African governments, like their populations, are expressing - sometimes virulently - nationalist and patriotic demands in both authoritarian and democratic contexts. Relations with traditional transatlantic partners and multilateral organisations (United Nations, European Union) are being called into question, while alternative partnerships with players whose presence has been enhanced over the last two decades (Saudi Arabia, Qatar, Turkey, Iran, UAE, Israel, Morocco, India, Russia, China, Brazil) are increasingly on the table. The aim of this round table is to review all these changes from a more endogenous perspective, i.e. the perspective of the African experts themselves.

WEDNESDAY, OCTOBER 9TH

GEOPOLITICAL RECOMPOSITIONS

Nearly seven decades after the Treaty of Rome, the European Union is facing challenges that are difficult to overcome: economic stagnation, the crisis of political representation and the war in Ukraine have all undermined a model that was already riddled with contradictions. Against this backdrop, there are a number of arguments to support anti-European sentiment, a key factor at the heart of the European elections in June 2024. What is the future and what direction should European governance take in the face of rising internal paradoxes and external perils?

INFLUENCE STRATEGIES AND INFORMATION MANIPULATION: CHALLENGES FOR 2024, A MAJOR ELECTION YEAR?

WEDNESDAY, OCTOBER 9TH
8.30 AM, COLBERT ROOM

CROSSING SECURITY CHALLENGES

Influence has been established as a strategic priority and a new area of conflict. It refers to all the non-military strategies put in place by belligerents to influence conflicts, whether they involve them directly. This gives rise to a format of 'hybrid warfare', bringing together a range of techniques, methods and tools to achieve its ends. The 'war of influence' gives rise to a number of responses on the part of states, which are increasing their vigilance in the face of these threats and creating different structures to adapt to these crucial issues. So what are the practical effects of this adaptation? How can we analyse and respond effectively to these new threats at national, European and international level?

TABLE

MARITIME SURVEILLANCE: WHAT THREATS? WHAT OPPORTUNITIES?

WEDNESDAY, OCTOBER 9TH
8.30 AM, RAIMU ROOM

TECHNOLOGICAL CHALLENGES AND DISRUPTIONS

The maritime world faces many challenges, not the least of which is that of surveillance capabilities. The resources and organisation put in place must not hinder the many peaceful uses of maritime areas, while enabling the detection of threats, whether intentional or accidental, particularly in times of contestation or confrontation. They must respond to a number of challenges: defending our maritime approaches, protecting people, property and infrastructures located on the coast, securing underwater communication networks and preserving the environment, all of which are under threat from multiple sources (terrorism, illegal trafficking, illegal immigration, economic espionage, hybrid or military strategies). To prevent these threats, there are a variety of surveillance resources (drones, satellites, radar), but they do not cover all areas. They are often used in silos by their respective operators, and the increase in the volume of data collected comes up against the limits of operational capacity. Given this situation, technological advances in sensors and information processing systems must be harnessed to create an integrated maritime surveillance system, which is still lacking.

JEAN-MICHEL MARTINET - FMES

Jean-Michel Martinet is deputy director of the Maritime Department of the FMES. He has had an operational career in surface forces. 10.15 AM, TRUCY-VAUBAN AMPHITHEATER

STRATEGIC AND POLITICAL ISSUES

Conflict has now settled in Europe and on its southern flank: while the ruins in Nagorno-Karabakh, Iraq, Syria, Yemen, Eritrea and Libya are still smouldering, Ukraine, Palestine, Lebanon, Sudan and the Sahel are once again the scene of the use of military force. These conflicts are characterised by increased intensity, an emancipation from international law and actions that are profoundly transforming the way war is waged. This round table will look at current conflicts on the European Union's southern flank and their operational consequences for France's land forces.

CONFLICTS IN THE MIDDLE EAST: A STRATEGIC TURNING POINT?

WEDNESDAY, OCTOBER 9TH
3.15 pm, TRUCY-VAUBAN AMPHITHEATER

GEOPOLITICAL RECOMPOSITIONS

With the exception of the confrontation between Israel and Iran, the strategic and geopolitical realignments in the Middle East are characterised by an appeasement of tensions between Iran and the Gulf monarchies, and by the resulting primacy of economic and demographic issues, by the spectacular breakthrough of Chinese influence in the region, by the return of Russia and the systematic multi-alignment of regional players, by the assertiveness of Iran, which has almost reached the nuclear threshold, by the affirmation of Turkey and India, and by the growing isolation of Israel, which puts the United States in an uncomfortable position. Paradoxically, Europe remains a secondary player in this recomposition, which nevertheless concerns it.

In this context, the war between Israel and Hamas and Hezbollah, with its risk of regional extension, is disrupting these recompositions and restoring the United States to its role as provider of security, while reinforcing its dissuasive posture towards all those who dream of expelling it from the Middle East. This round table will analyse the latest significant evolutions in the region, at a time when the conflict involving Israel is continuing and the US presidential election is approaching, the outcome of which will have a crucial impact on the recompositions underway.

THE WAR ECONOMY AND REINDUSTRIALISATION: WHAT IMPLICATIONS FOR THE DEFENCE INDUSTRY IN THE CONTEXT OF THE RESURGENCE OF HIGH- INTENSITY CONFLICTS?

WEDNESDAY, OCTOBER 9TH
3.15 PM, COLBERT ROOM

TECHNOLOGICAL CHALLENGES AND DISRUPTIONS

After 40 years of disarmament and deindustrialization, a consensus is emerging that the time has come to give our armies the means to fight in conflicts that require both high-tech equipment and large numbers of it. The dilemma between quality and quantity is a different one for armies in service that are now considering the possibility of war on a shorter timescale. However, European and French societies are not really aware of the change in times. How could war be prepared, morally and practically, in a society that still felt at peace? How should the economy be organised to meet the contradictory demands of maintaining a welfare state and ensuring the survival of a vulnerable society? What are the capacities for which quality must be preserved? And those for which quantity should be privileged?

YOUNG PEOPLE AND WAR PERCEPTIONS, REACTIONS, COMMITMENTS

KEYNOTE SPEAKER LIEUTENANT GENERAL PIERRE-JOSEPH GIVRE

A graduate of the Lyon Institute of Political Studies, Lieutenant General Pierre-Joseph Givre is from Saint-Cyrien. A graduate of the Ecole de Guerre, he has been Director of National Service and Youth (DSNJ) at the Ministry of the Armed Forces since 2023.

For more than two years, conflicts in the immediate vicinity of France and the European Union have multiplied. The Russian invasion of Ukraine and the intensification of the conflict in the Middle East have brought high-intensity wars back to the forefront of the international stage. The major paradigm of the last thirty years, which advocated international cooperation through multilateralism, now seems incapable of resolving these conflicts. Faced with this new reality, young people seem particularly determined to make their voices, their own concerns and their priorities heard in order to rethink the system of international governance.

This round table will give young people the opportunity to express their views on the issues underlying conflicts and on the notion of commitment, as well as to debate the various consequences that these upheavals are having on the younger generations: are young people ready to wage war? Under what conditions and for what purpose? Is war necessary to end a conflict? Is the feeling of belonging to a wider community such as the European Union enough for the younger generation to commit to defending a country that is not their own? Do multilateral bodies still make sense today when it comes to resolving conflicts?

GEOPOLITICS AND CONFLICTS: THE PERSPECTIVE OF THE CHIEF OF NAVAL STAFF

WEDNESDAY, OCTOBER 9TH
5 PM, TRUCY-VAUBAN AMPHITHEATER

ADMIRAL NICOLAS VAUJOUR CHIEF OF NAVAL STAFF

Admiral Nicolas Vaujour joined the École Navale in 1989 and took part in several missions in Africa, Haiti and the Indian Ocean. He commanded various ships, including the frigate Chevalier Paul, and held a number of positions on the Armed Forces General Staff. Promoted Rear Admiral in 2018, then Vice Admiral in 2020, he became Chief of Staff of the French Armed Forces in 2021. In 2023, he was appointed Chief of Staff of the Navy, with the rank of Admiral. He is an Officer of the Legion of Honour and Commander of the National Order of Merit.

The geopolitical tensions that are on the rise originate on land, but are also expressed at sea. In our fractured world, military action at sea is more frequent, more diverse and more sensitive, because our everyday lives depend on maritime trade and undersea cables. The naval battle in the Black Sea, the Houthi strikes in the Red Sea, the Chinese provocations in the China Sea, the Russian demonstrations in the Eastern Mediterranean, the Turkish intimidation around Cyprus and the American or European operations in the Mediterranean and Red Sea are all illustrations of these growing balances of power.

The Chief of Naval Staff is responsible for thinking, preparing and leading the Navy of today and tomorrow. What is his analysis of geopolitical developments and their impact on conflicts at sea? How are conflicts evolving, driven by new players with new technologies (hypervelocity missiles, information networks, drones, cyber, AI, etc.)? How can we adapt our sailors and their ships to a battle that can start right now? What kind of navy for the middle of the century? These are the issues that will be addressed in this discussion with Admiral Vaujour.
